DEDICATION

IN OUR MOMENTS OF DEEPEST DESPONDENCY,
SHE HAS CHEERED US; OUR FAILURES SHE HAS TURNED TO VICTORIES BY HER NEVER-ENDING
CONFIDENCE; WHEN WE WERE PERPLEXED, SHE WAS OUR GUIDE; IN DISCOURAGEMENT, OUR INSPIRATION. IN APPRECIATION OF ALL OF THIS AND MORE, TO MISS ILLMAN, WE THE
CLASS OF THIRTY-ONE DO DEDICATE OUR BOOK.

FOREWORD

WE, THE CLASS OF NINETEEN THIRTY-ONE
PRESENT "THE SPAN", THE YEARBOOK OF THE
GRADUATING CLASS OF THE ILLMAN TRAINING
SCHOOL FOR KINDERGARTEN AND PRIMARY
TEACHERS. AS A LAKE REFLECTS ITS SURROUND-
INGS, WE HOPE THAT THIS BOOK WILL RECALL
TO OUR MINDS THE TWO HAPPY YEARS THIS CLASS HAS SPENT TOGETHER.

MISS THORPE

WE WISH TO EXPRESS OUR GRATITUDE FOR HER
CHALLENGING SPIRIT, HER SINCERE UNDER-
STANDING, HER DEEP-ROOTED CONVICTIONS,
AND HER UNSPARING GENEROSITY IN GIVING
HER TIME AND ATTENTION TO THE PROBLEMS
OF OTHERS. THESE HAVE WON FOR HER THE ESTEEM AND LOVE OF ALL ILLMAN GIRLS.

IN APPRECIATION

SHE POSSESSES A CHARACTERISTIC THAT MAKES HER ADMIRER AND LOVED BY ALL
ILLMAN GIRLS—A DEEP-ROOTED, GENUINE
UNDERSTANDING OF YOUTH. SHE HAS
THAT DELIGHTFUL MIXTURE OF THE OLD
IDEALS AND THEIR MODERN APPLICATION.
IN APPRECIATION OF THIS, HER SINCERE,
UNTIRING EFFORTS WHICH BROUGHT ABOUT THE SUCCESS OF OUR PLAY, AND
HER FRIENDLY INTEREST AND UNDER-
STANDING GUIDANCE DURING OUR TWO YEARS OF ASSOCIATION WE ARE GRATEFUL
TO HER, MRS. MACMILLAN.

MAKE BELIEVE

Just a baby puppy lying in the sun,
Stretching out his little legs, one by one,
Feeling, oh, so happy—not a thing to do
Tracing little white clouds across a sky of blue.

Dreams he sees a kitten playing with a spool.
He will run and chase him but he will be fooled.
There isn't any kitten, and there isn't any pup.
And if you really want to know, this is just make-up.

MAY C. LOWER

THE CLOUD CIRCUS

Isn't it fun to lie on your back
And watch the clouds go by?
There's elephants, tigers, and round polar bears,
All walking across the sky.

Some walk on one foot, others stand on their heads,
While a few on their backs drift by;
But there's always thrills and surprises galore
At the cloud circus up in the sky.

CAROLINE GREENWOOD

LAUGHTER

The ability to laugh seems to me one of the finest attributes an individual can possess. If I had been one of the good fairies at the princess' christening I should not have endowed her with beauty, a ready wit or nimble feet, rather would I say, "To thee my dear, I give the priceless gift of laughter." She might not treasure it above the others at first—youth seldom does—it loves to weep—but as the years sped on she would turn toward it more and more.

By laughter I do not mean the shrill nervous giggles of self-conscious adolescents or the hollow mocking mirth of the cynic as he speaks of his warped views; but that gay, spontaneous, bubbling laugh which comes from the heart. It knows neither rank, nor time, nor place; it is as much at home in the humblest dwelling, as in the palace of the king. One meets it everywhere—in odd and unexpected places it rings forth to cheer the world.

When one has learned to laugh then one is well on the road of learning to live. There are so very few things that are worth ceaseless mourning. We sorrow and then, if we are wise, we straighten ourselves as do bent trees after a heavy storm and climb again to happiness over the rainbow bridge of laughter. God put us on the earth to work and play and suffer and then, because He is a kind God, he gave us laughter.

DOROTHY NELLIS.

MADNESS

The moon pours its silver
In wanton extravagance
All down the hillside
And into the pool.
So it's been doing for years without ending
Ever it pours, ever renewed.

Thus should our love be
Careless of hoarding
Mocking at meagerness
Laughing at dearth.
If we give all of it, we shall have more of it
To spend it lavishly over the earth.

ABOUT YELLOW

A flash of yellow
A ray of light
And over the hill
Comes a merry sprite.
A golden cap
And a suit of green
A buttercup,
Is the elf you've seen.

Lovely yellow daffodil
Slender, tall and bright
Growing on a sunny hill
Like a bit of light.

Dandelion said, "I'm a jolly fellow,
I live in the meadow bright
In the early spring my hair is yellow
But later it all turns white."

STUDENT COUNCIL

THE Student Council began but four years ago. In that time it has shown efficiency, in spite of the fact that it has had few problems to face. We hope, of course, that in the future it will have even less chance to show its ability.

It is composed of Miss Illman as Faculty Representative, the President of the Senior Class, the President of the Junior Class, a girl elected from the Senior Class, a girl elected from the Junior Class, and the House President from each dormitory.

NATALIE REISMAN, VIRGINIA NELSON, MRS. FREDERICK MACMILLAN, ARNOLD FLEETWOOD.

THE ILLMAN PLAYMAKERS

The Dramatic Club has chosen a name this year and is now known under the name of "The Illman Playmakers." The membership is optional, the club being composed of those interested in Dramatics. A play is chosen each year and is presented just before the Easter holidays. Last year J. M. Barrie's "Quality Street" was given and this year a modern play was presented. "Hay Fever" by Noel Coward was coached under the direction of Mrs. MacMillan and was very successful.

The Club had but three officers this year: Arnold Fleetwood, president; Natalie Reisman, treasurer, and Virginia Nelson, secretary, with Mrs. MacMillan as Faculty Advisor. nineteen thirty-one and nineteen thirty-two will always remember.

THE DRAMATIC CLUB PLAY

THE DRAMATIC CLUB

THE Dramatic Club reverted from its usual course this year and gave a modern play. They presented Noel Coward's very amusing play, "Hay Fever." Under the able coaching of Mrs. MacMillan, the play was a success. The girls portrayed the characters excellently.

CHARACTERS

Sorel Bliss—Serious-minded Daughter	Melisse Mullen
Simon Bliss—Son, embryo-artist	Arnold Fleetwood
Clara—Judith's ex-dresser	Mabel Flynn
Judith Bliss—Mother, reluctant ex-actress	Florence Lindsley
David Bliss—The Father, a novelist	Margaret Wickersham
Sandy Tyrell—Judith's latest flair	Florence Smith
Myra Arundel—Clever sophisticate	Elizabeth Greenwood
Richard Greatham—A Diplomat	May Lower
Jackie Caryton—Specimen of Inane Flapper	Helen Ambler

They proved that the Dramatic Club could successfully present a modern play.

A WHITE FLAG

A flower? Only that? But proudly challenging, white and glistening, it shines there, protected "mille fois" by an army of green bayonets. A thing to be fought for with struggling, reaching hands that are repulsed and pulled back by the ever-guarding blades. It is a lovely thing, to pluck, gaze upon, glory in, caress, love and press upon my breast. Will ever the chance to enfold such a jewel come my way again? Yes, it is worth the fight, the struggle—I must have it for my own—

But the Flower's feet are in the mud. I shall be soiled in gaining it. And will it, when gained, be only bruised and sickened by my caresses and warm breath? Will it upon a flight of glorious consciousness pass away and leave me only withered stems and regrets?

Shall I struggle on, capture my symbol of breathless beauty, watch it slacken and die in my grasp and have nothing but soiled shoes, or shall I keep my shoes clean, leaving it to fill me with wonderment from afar, a memory, instead of regrets, of something alive and in the prime of glory—?

Ah, Life is so complex—!

ARNOLD FLEETWOOD.

MOONLIGHT

The earth was drenched with moonlight
Familiar things assumed a dream-like form
Black fir trees stood like velvet lace against the silver of the sky
Blue shadows etched themselves with startling sharpness upon the lawn
A hushed stillness was upon the scene
Tall columns rose in serene white marble beauty
And waited for the ghosts of Ancient Greece
To dance before them in the enchanted light.

DOROTHY NELLIS.

EXPECTATION

One day, I shall go forth to meet the Spring
And stand up on a hill, and both arms fling
Wide in the wind sea-blown across the sands,
To catch its salty fragrance in my hands.

Before the first bird dares, I'll wildly sing
And urge my quickened thoughts on eager wing
To pry from ancient bridges the good stone
And curve it skyward till the arch be thown.

Against the sun and stars. Red blood in me
Shall leap, before the slow sap fills the tree.
My fullest strength shall blossom and surpass
The freshness and the sweetness of new grass.

VIRGINIA SMITH.

MY VERY PERSONAL UTOPIA

Someday—someday I'm going to sit on the top of a high, high hill where I'll feel the wind in my hair and the sun on my face. I'll look at the trees, the flowers, the countryside—really see them—just look and look and look. I'm going to listen to a raindrop fall like a silver bell and not a deadly splash. And then I'll paint a picture, a wondrous gleaming picture, and write a book, a charming, heart-rending book. I'll make up poems—poems so beautiful that they'll touch the soul of the bitterest cynic, and compose music that will thrill the greatest musical fanatic.

Someday I'm going to remember that the moon is really a golden plate and the stars are the little holes in the floor of heaven—not merely shining, fiery, metal discs. I'll look at all the tiny bugs and sunbeams. And it will come to me suddenly that I've forgotten all these years that they are baby nymphs flying around laughing to one another.

And then someday, I'm going to take a shining boat and go somewhere, just anywhere—I don't care at all—over the shimmering sea. I'll let the salty water splash in my face and the cold winds cool it. And I'm going to—

But it's eight o'clock. I'll be late for school. I'm off to teach children to paint my pictures, to write my poems, to look at my trees and flowers—to dream my dreams. But isn't it worth it? Suppose I had no dreams to give them? But then again—Someday.

LAURA ELIZABETH SAUSSER.

A THOUGHT

Of all the million acres of land
And all the miles of ocean and sea,
I thought, while resting on the sand
How very little there is of me.

FLORENCE LINDSLEY.

HAPPINESS

Lost—the art of happiness, which was crushed into many pieces and tossed to the four winds. Perhaps, as you travel the highways and byways of life you will find it again. We are all searching for it, each in his own manner, but only a very few find any of its flowers. It is strange for the flowers of happiness are many. They grow along the pathways which we all must follow. Gather happiness as you journey on, for it is scattered in many places. There is no large field at the end of the road where these flowers are found in abundance; where we can gather as many as we desire. Then, live in happiness ever after. Now is the time for happiness—today; this hour. Around us on every side are the flowers. We need only to see, recognize, and gather these humble blossoms; remembering always, that the flowers of happiness which yield the most joy are those which are shared with another.

He who is selfish can never be truly happy. Whether it be the happiness of wealth, friendship, beauty, or love, there must be someone to share it with, if the joy is to be complete. Happiness is fundamental. Upon it depends the life of every person. Love is happiness; friendship is happiness; beauty is happiness; life is happiness. Who would, if they could, live without it? Is it not good to be alive! The joy of living fills one with the desire to do; to act; to achieve. What? Happiness, and more happiness! Take it within your hands; hold it gently, all the while breathing in the sweet lingering fragrance of its blossoms. Then with a happy smile place it in the hands of another.

MAY C. LOWER.

BEAUTY

Beauty—to define it
Is like trying to imprison
With mere words
The matchless glory of the sunset's fire;
The crystal clearness of the trembling dew;
Or the keen ecstasy of far-borne wind.

DOROTHY NELLIS.

AN IMPRESSION OF A MOOD

A mood is a queer intangible something—that something that either makes one feel that he is living or merely existing. There is that mood that comes at times that makes one cheerful, happy, courageous and even adventurous. That is “living.” Then, often there comes stealing in the magnetic mood of retiring from work, slouching,—giving up. That is “existing.” Interest in everything is lost when yielding to the “don’t care” mood that is especially apparent in spring. In such a care-free mood, one heeds to no trouble, worry, annoyance, anxiety or anything of the like. While under the spell of a happy-go-lucky mood, everything is met with a smile, for there is no such thing as trouble. However, in a flash, such a mood is gone and soon an uneasy, restless mood creeps in which causes one to become annoyed by almost anything, wearisome, and harassing. This mysterious something, a mood, changes one so that in the morning he may feel that his heart is wrinkling like an old man’s forehead, but by night it is smooth again, smooth and clear.

“I have my moods of stern resolve;
I’m master of my fate, I know.
These moods don’t change my life at all—
It’s very nice to have them though.”

E. FLORENCE LINDSLEY.

BLUE

When you have reached that state in which you can really be blue; not blue in the sense of being low-spirited, but just blue. Oh, to be like the blue of the sky at twilight; alive and feeling, yet dreamy and distant. There is a deep feeling of oneness when you are blue like the sky; a oneness which is found only when lost in distance; lost in space. The feel of blue is like cooling night, after a hot day; it breathes of the music of the whirling planets; of rivers of gentle moonlight; of stars and stars, thousands of them, flung over all. It carries you beyond and beyond until all sense of being is gone; all consciousness lost. You are like a blue star, revolving through space, travelling without chart; without destination. You are a part of all past, present, and future—you are blue!

MAY C. LOWER.

OH!

Someone related a very strange tale to me the other day. And this is what it was:

"Fortieth and Baltimore Avenue had never seemed very unusual to me until about a week ago. But from then on it has always reminded me of one of the most curious incidents of my life.

"I was walking along in a peaceful mood when, suddenly, out of an alleyway came at least twenty girls running at top speed. They raced right across the street and disappeared into the door of a drug store. 'An accident,' I thought. But no! By the time I had reached the alleyway, all of them came running back. They were an odd sight indeed—coats half on, hats on the back of their heads and millions—yes, millions of Hydroxes in their hands. Perhaps they had just missed their breakfasts.

"But where were they going? 'I'll follow them,' I said to myself. By the time I had reached the doorway into which they had disappeared, there was not a soul in sight. All that was in evidence was a bench, a table, a clock, and two bulletin boards. The latter were covered with papers on which were written 'Will the following girls please see me immediately?'

"But there was a hallway on my right. I decided to explore it. Ah, there were my twenty girls all jammed into a little room and screaming, 'Oh, it's out' or 'Here's forty cents for four days and I didn't even read it.'

"I left there very quickly and thought I'd try the second floor. Just then a bell rang. I was pushed up the stairs by an angry mob only to have two doors slammed in my face. Luckily they had windows in them and I could, at least, watch. But what a sight to meet my eyes! There was a girl sitting in a circle with perhaps ten other girls and she was asking them the most absurd questions about a very foolish picture she was holding in her hand. 'What is the little girl looking at? Yes, a dolly. I know a lovely story about a dolly. Would you like to hear it?' At their excited cries of 'Yes,' she began: 'I've a dear little dolly, she has eyes of bright blue—'

"This was really quite enough. Perhaps the third floor would be better. But a stranger sight was yet to appear. Through one of the doors I saw a lady standing before another group of girls and she was—now can you believe it?—she was sticking her tongue out at them. Not only that but she was making faces and uttering queer sounds. I really didn't know what kind of a place this could be. And in the next room—this is the oddest of all—stood another lady in front of another group of girls. And she was telling them—really seriously telling them—the story of the Three Billy Goats Gruff. Imagine telling grown girls—truly grown-up girls—about three billy goats. This was a strange place indeed!

"I ran quickly down to the first floor and saw two doors there I had missed. I looked in one—and really I almost believe I was dreaming—for there were more girls—really grown-up ones again—playing (no, you won't believe it) Farmer in the Dell. Actually—playing—Farmer-in-the-Dell.

"This was no place for me. Just as I was about to leave, that bell rang again and I was pushed out of the door and down the steps. As I was trying to pick my poor, bewildered self up from the pavement, twenty, thirty, forty girls rushed at top speed past me and ran down the alley."

A PRESENTATION

INASMUCH as we have derived so many benefits from the keen observation of the faculty, we have thought it only courteous on our part to reciprocate their interest in our needs and wants. Therefore, during our two years of training, we have endeavored to note the special desires of all our instructors. With this in mind, we hereby present the following gifts to them.

To—

MISS ILLMAN—A gold bound, jewel studded edition of the complete works of John Dewey.

MISS THORPE—A class replete with professional attitude clothes and minds.

DR. KING—At least ten instead of five girls who are "thinking with him."

MISS PORTIA MILLER—Two errand girls to take the place of Edith Holloway and Louise Bill.

DR. OBERLY—At least one girl who understands at least one question on at least one of his exams, at least once during the year.

MISS BERTOLETTE—A few conscientious girls who finish all of her assignments on time.

MISS BAKER—A player piano in tune.

MISS MOTHERAL—A room with no back rows.

DR. RUSSELL—New worlds to discover.

MISS FLORENCE MILLER—A merger of the Perry Picture Company and Theodore Presser's with offices in Philadelphia.

MR. HAMMANN—A group of girls in the back of the room who do not own notebooks.

MRS. DAVIS—Noiseless typewriters for each individual to save fountain pens and writer's cramp.

DR. WEYL—At least two girls who can leave her class feeling that they don't already have measles, scabies, T. B., and a general run-down condition.

MRS. DOTTERER—A private library of reference books.

MISS WATSON—A complete Nursery School "set-up."

MR. McKELVIE—A checking room for the girls' chewing gum.

MISS MATLACK—A name tag for each girl to give her marvelous memory a rest.

MRS. DU PAUL—Four or five "monotones" for demonstration.

MISS McELWEE—Girls with enough intelligence to find a book.

MRS. MacMILLAN—A class of "unspoiled children" with the requisite amount of "savoir faire."

MISS WORRELL—An unself-conscious class.

MISS QUINN—A frosted window to keep enthusiastic observers from the door of the first and second grade room.

MISS GUILFOYLE—A class of Kindergarten, first and second grade children with good posture.

LAST WILL AND TESTAMENT

THE SPAN STAFF of 1931 most willingly bequeath their erasers, pencils, papers, pens, paper clips, notebooks, etc., and what will be left, by June fourth, of their fast decreasing energy and once well-built up nervous system, to the SPAN Staff of 1932.

The officers of the Class of 1931 do bequeath to the officers of next year's graduating class any ability they may have in collecting class dues, holding class meetings, getting unanimous agreements on votes and the strong will and vitality necessary to accomplish these things.

The Class of 1931 most humbly and heartily bequeath to next year's Seniors the one or two pages of notes that are not going in their curriculum books, any of their surplus will-power to be used every Saturday morning next year, and that nonchalant and dauntless air which is donned when seeing little white slips inscribed with their names, posted on the bulletin board.
